TUESDAY EVEN'G., SEPTEMBER 30.

Lady Jane Grey's Last Hours.

She did not wish to die-at seventeen no one wants to di -bu: death, in her present adverse state, appeared is a benign angel, rather than a messenger of gloom and wrath.

Racked with anguish at the shameful apcs. tacy of Northumberland to Romanism just before he was executed, she cried out in hely wrath, "Like as his life was wicked, so was his end. I pray God that neither I nor friend of mine die so!" And kindling with renewed fervor the added, "Should I, who ameo young and io my fewer teens, forsake my faith for love of life? Nay, God forbit; and much more he should not; whose fatal course, though he had lived for years, could not long have continued. But life is sweet. * * God be merciful to us " * * On the fatal morning of February 9, 1553, dressed with extreme care in a black velvet gown, Lady Jane came forth from her prison, a grayer book in her hand, a heavenly suite on her feet, a tender light to her gray eyes. She walked made tly across the green, passed the files of seldiers, mounted these field, and then, turning her beautiful face towards the spectaters calmly said:

"Good people, I am come hither to die.-The fact against the Queen's highness was unlawful, but touching the procurement and desire thereof by me, or on my behalf, I will wash my hands guilless thereof, and deliver to my God a soul as pure from such trespass as it is is necest from injustice; but only for that I conseated to the thing I was forced unto, constraint making the law believe that which I never understood."

She paused as if to put away from her the world, then she added:

"I pray you all good Christian people to bear me witness that I die a true Christian woman, and that I look to be saved by no other means than the meter of God, in the merits of the blood of his only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. And now, good people, while I am alive I pray you to assist me with your prayers.

Koccling down, she said to Feekenham, the only divine whom Mary would allow to come "Shall I say this pealed?" The prelate faltered, "Yes."

On which the repeated in a clear voice the noble psalm: "Have mercy upon me, O God, af or the great goodcess; according to the multitude of thy mercies do away with mise of-

When she had come to the last line, the rose on her feet, took off her gloves and kerchief, which the gave to her gentlewoman. The Book of Psalms she gave to Thomas Brydges, the liquitenant's deputy, in which she had written these lines: "Call upon God to incline your heart to his laws, to quicken you in his way, and do not take the word of truth utterly out of your mouth."

Then she untied her gown and took off her bridal gear; the headsman offered to assist her, but she put his hands gently aside, and drow a white kerchief around her eyes. She whispered in his ear a few soft words of pity and pardon as in his ear a few soft words of pity and pardon as the figure of the veiled executioner sank at her feet and berged for forgiveness. In a distinct voice she said to the executioner, "Pray, dispatch me quickly." Being blinded and unable to see the block on which to lay her young head, she was seen to feel about for it with her hands, and was heard to say, confused, "O, what shall I do? Where is it?" The guard and Feckenham led her to the right place; as she laid her noble head upon the latal block, before the death stroke could reach her, the sweet lips were heard to murmur. "Lord, into thy hands I commend to murmur, "Lord, into thy hands I commend my spirit." With these givine words the soul sale by F. J. DAVIDSON, of Lady Jane Grey passed into its everlasting sep 15 137 King St. of Lady Jano Grey passed into its everlasting rest, and the fairest, wisest head in all the English realm fell from under the gleaming axo. -National Repository.
